

Gentlemen - even though this act has not officially taken effect as of this writing, please immediately expand this action to include, at an absolute minimum, long-distance telephone providers, insurers, and airlines. The Commission has made an excellent start, but do not leave these gaping exceptions in place.

Does any of the Commission members really want to receive a couple of calls every night wondering if he (she) wishes to change long-distance providers, has enough life insurance, or would like to sign up for the airlines own credit card to earn frequent flyer miles?

The average consumer is more than capable of initiating these types of discussions on his own.
